The facts out of which this action arose are not only remarkable in themselves, but derive an additional interest from their long suppression! The plaintiff, General Marcus Slade, is the twin-brother, and the defendant, Alfred Slade, is the eldest son, of the late Sir Frederick Slade, upon the validity of whose marriage in 1839 the right of succession depends. We THE PREMISES situated at Peldar's Wharf. must, however, go back as fur as 1825 in order I now occupied by Messra. D. Sassoon to arrive at the fountain bead of this compli- Sons & Co. years ago, Miss Mostyn, now the widow of Sir For further particulars, apply to Frederick, was living with ber mother at Milan. She there became intimate with a Baron von Korber, then a lieutenant in the Austrian Bugincere, and a marriage ceremony was solamnized between them at the Church of St. Fedele The union, which seems to have been hartily contracted, proyed eminently unhappy. With in six months a judicial separation was procured, and an agreement signed whereby an inquity was scoured by Mrs. Mostyn to the Baron n consideration of his undertaking to molest her daughter no longer. It appears that before this agreement was made Madame von Korber ad already found a protector in Mr. Frederick Slade, afterwards Sir Fredorick, Slade, and she renewed her acquaintance with him upon their return to England. Morethan seven years passed without her seeing anything of the Baron, and in December, 1833, she was married to Mr. Slade, at St. George's, Hanover-square; General Mayous Slade, however, states, in a letter to his nephow, that "the marriage was never made publie until 1848," and was then immediately chal-lenged by himself as illegal. The Boron, who THE HOUSE No. 2, College Gardens. W. WILSON. lenged by himself as illegal. The Baron, who lived to be a Major General, died in 1858, and ten years later Sir Frederick Slade (having long been known in the family, and far beyond the family, that it was the intention of General Stade to claim the title and estates in the event BLACKHEAD & Co.'s, and immediately East of of his surviving Sir Frederick; indeed, he had Gibb's Wharf. course, that the marriage at St. George's, Hanoversquare, and any subsequent re-nurringe up to the death of Baron you Körber, was void, and the defendant illegitimate. The grounds FROM lat June next, the HOUSE No. 3, upon which the validity of the former marriage of Graph Simet, at present occupied by was denied on his behalf were twofold. It was Messra. Mangesson & Co. urged, in the first place, that no due publication of the bans had ever taken place. Here the documentary evidence was incomplete, and, as a military priest called Fold Superior Nazy, the parish priest having declined the office because the bridegroom was a Protestant and the bride a Oatholic, and no dispensation had been given for a mixed marriage. To this it was replied, for the plaintiff, that a Feld Superior, under the military law of Austria, had spiritual jurisdiction over the Baron, Massra E.Mus Houst and SANDER. though a Protestant, at least for this purpose, and that if any irregularity was committed, it was at all events not sufficient to annul the marriage. The plaintiffs counsel further contended that it was incumbent on the defendant. to establish the invalidity of this estensible marsisted, on the contrary, that it was for their op- on moderate terms. ponents to set asule the subsequent marriage at St. George's, Hanover-square, especially as that marriage, if invalid, was an act of bigamy. The Chief Baron and Baron Martin, adopting the latter alternative, gave judgment for the defendant; Barons Bramwell and Pigott, adopting the former, gave judgment for the plaintiff.

In this, as in all disputes affecting the in-heritance of property, the bias of public sym-pathy, as Baron Pigott acknowledged, naturally selines towards the lineal descendant. Nine Englishmen out of ten would be disposed to side with a young man who seems to have been kept for years in ignorance of the doubts which. as many strangers well knew, rested upon his legitimacy and expectations. To him, more ver, the loss of his suit is the loss, not of title or fucume only, but of whatever advantages belong to birth in lawful wedlock. On the other hand, It is possible that General Slade, who married in 1842, and has children, was no les; estonished to hear in 1848 that his twin brother professed to be a married man. Knowing of his ulleged sister-in-law's marriage with Baron von Korber, and being aware that the Baron was still alive, he may well have supposed that
